Abondan

Abondan (Abonda) is a rhythm from the Baoule-people from the Ivory Coast. It is probably a very old rhythm that was played when the King went out to ride (on the horse). The story goes that boys and girls danced in honour of the King. After that dance the King held a speech. Nowadays Abondan is danced in a circle.

Adjos

Adjos is a rhythm of the Baolé-people from the South of Ivory Coast. It used to be a slow and majestic dance to be played for the king. Nowadays it’s played much faster. The intro is traditional. This song was sung especially in honour of Samore Touré (a very important King). In the song the audience repeats the line that has been sung by the solo-singer. After a while the change to the second line is made and after some more time you can go back to the first, and repeat the sequence.

_Ee ee ee al ma mi yoo_
_Aa ee kou gbe ko ja ma lu ee_

Everybody is there, for him!

Bada

Bada is played as a transition between two Dununbas.
The following are names of different rhythms commonly agreed to be part of the family of rhythms known as Dununba:

Bada     Balan-sonde
Bando Djei    Bandogialli
Bolo Konondo   Demosoni Kelen
Dunun Gbe (Doundoumbe)  Donaba
Gberedu       Gbunkundo
Kadan         Konowule(n) (I and II)
Koudindoundoun Kuraba Don
Nantalomba    Taama
Takosaba      Takonani

The origin is Hamanah (a canton in the Kouroussa Prefecture, Upper Guinea).

The word "dunumba" or "doundumba" describes a type of dance that is popular in Upper Guinea in the Kankan, Siguiri and Kourousa regions, but its roots are to be found in Hamanah, a canton of the prefecture of Kourousa. It is also called "the Dance of the Strong Men". The names of its various rhythms, of which there are a good twenty, are taken from their places of origin, from the names of the people they portray or to whom they are dedicated, from the characteristics of their structure or from the way the performers appear during the dance.

The "Dance of the Strong Men" as danced by the Malinke of Hamanah occupies a position that makes it more of a social ritual than an amusement, although this aspect is also not ignored. It takes place in the Bara, the space for dancing that every village possesses and which has a large tree, either a Kapok or Mangrove, planted in the center. The circles of men or boys are formed around the tree, each circle representing a social or age group (kare). The Baranti, the masters of the Bara form the group that assumes responsibility for the smooth running of the festivities. They are the first to dance, and no-one else can use the Bara without their agreement. Although the Dunumba is reserved for men as its name indicates, women could take part by dancing at one side or by coming to the centre to enliven the atmosphere.

The heirarchies between the Kara ar between individuals are given their expression in the dance, with personal conflicts being also regulated in a formalized manner with blows of the Manin Fosson, a riding crop woven from hippopotamus skin, to the sound of the drums. The Baratingi, the eldest youths of the village, demonstrate their courage by provoking their younger colleagues, the Baradogono, to the sound of the dunumba.
The circles that correspond to each of these two groups are laid concentrically around the tree planted in the middle of the Bara. The leader carries a decorated hatchet called Djende and a Manin Fosson. When one of the younger boys wishes to join a group of older boys, he moves out of his own circle and dances backwards. He meets the leader of the other groups who asks him "The way!", to which he answers "It is marked on the back!". A reciprocal flagellation then follows, that leads either to the boy's acceptance or rejection by the older group when the men who are present, appreciating the boy's courage, put a stop to the test.

Certain healers also attributed therapeutic virtues to the dance through its creation of states of trance and hypnosis.

Important collective decisions were taken before or after the great Dunumba, since almost the whole community would be gathered together at such times.

Dunumba is also the name of the largest of the drums, and it is just as indispensable for sustaining the enthusiasm of the dancers as it is of the players. The Dunun are drums whose cylindrical barrel is covered by a skin at each end. A metal bell is fixed above the barrel, which is placed horizontally. The drummer strikes one of the skins with a large stick that is held in one hand while with the other he strikes the bell with a metal strip or bolt. There are always three of these drums in the regions discussed here, and they are, from largest to smallest, Dunumba, Sangban, and Kenkeni.

The ideal ensemble in which the Dunumba can be performed is made up of three dunun, to which two djembes are added for the accompanyment of one or more solo djembes. (Excerpts from Hamanah liner notes, Mamady Keita. This CD is ESSENTIAL for anyone interested in Dunumba.)

Comes from Hamanah (region of Kouroussa). Here the dunun are always played in threes; kenkeni, sangba, dununba. It is the last which leads while the djembe accompanies. The importance of equilibrium between dunun is fundamental here. There are more than fifty rhythms of this family of which the variations play on the length of the phrases and the cycles of measures. The one in this recording has a cycle of two measures. At its origin, a war dance in which boys of different age groups confront each other armed with whips: it is called "dance of the strong men". Today it is practiced more pacifically in all festival occasions, and even women take part. (Wossolon)

Dununba, the "Dance of the Strong Men" is a very old dance, performed, as its name suggests, only by men. There are approximately 20 Dununba rhythms, each with its corresponding dance. Originally this repertoire was known only to the Malinke-Hamanah, but today it has become very popular and is regularly performed by other people, such as the Susu of Guinea and the Wolof of Senegal, although in a greatly modified style.

The different rhythms have some features in common: the tempo is somewhat slow, the rhythmic cycle is 12 pulses and the kenkeni always plays only one rhythm: ( . . o . o o ). The rhythmic figures played by the soloist are all similar, but they must be coordinated nonetheless to the different phrase lengths of the dances, some of which may reach eight cycles, and to the steps of the dancers.
Before the festival, the drummers assemble in front of the house of the djembe-fola (soloist) and announce the beginning of the festival by playing a few moments of the rhythm. After a short pause, they start again. This is a signal for all the unmarried girls in the village to assemble at the village square (Bara) in order to accompany the drummers with their singing and handclapping. As the drummers are playing the third time through the rhythm, they proceed to the square. Once they arrive, they build a small fire and place their instruments in front of it to heat the heads. Any girls who have not arrived by this time are punished by five light lashes on the legs.

Meanwhile, the Barrati-s have arrived. These are thirty to forty men, all big and strong, who determine and control the development of the event. They are masters of the dance square, they have instruments and retain the privilege of the first dance. The title of Barrati may conferred only within certain families. If other men than the present Barranti-s wish to become new Barranti-s, they must organize themselves into a group at a Dununba festival and advance on the present Barrati-s. A veritable battle follows, using whips of hippopotamus hide. If the provocateurs win, they are pronounced the new Barrati-s.

When the music starts up again (after warming the drum heads), the Barrati-s begin the dance, arranging themselves in two lines. Brandishing a decorated hatchet (Gende) in the right hand, and a hippo-hide whip (Manimfosson) in the left, the dancers advance slowly, in step, towards the drummers. Once they arrive, each Barrati in turn dances solo, showing his best form in order to impress the girls assembled behind the drummers. After this, other men may ask permission to dance as well.

Throughout the entire festival, one strange looking man dressed in a monkey skin dances around the perimeter of the dance square.

Dununba is performed today at all large festivals. (Rhythmen Der Malinke)

This is a rhythm from Guinea which means "dance of the strong men". The dance, which is very acrobatic, gives the men a chance to express their bravery and courage in front of their betrothed as well as the village elders; they strike their bodies with a riding crop made from animal muscle. (Drame)

"We have a dance we call dounouba. It is for people who are threatening each other or are in an intense rivalry. After elders, family members, and friends have tried to counsel the disputants to no avail, the dounouba ceremony is held in the village square. The two men who are at odds each take a stick. The stick is round, about three quarters of an inch in diameter, and reaches from the ground to about the hip in length. The men face each other. The musicians play the drums with very exciting rhythms designed to bring out the stored-up aggressiveness in the feuding parties. The men engage in ritual combat, striking at each other and defending themselves with their sticks. In front of everyone else in the village, they settle their differences. The rest of the village will be left in peace, since not an ounce of their hostility remains unexpressed."
"Some national dance troupes in West Africa have presented this dance in pantomime fashion to foreign audiences and called it the dance of the strong man. Originally though, it was not a spectacle, but a practical means of bringing real conflicts to a climax and to an end." (Diallo and Hall, The Healing Drum, Destiny Books, Rochester, Vermont 1989, p 111.)

a) social/age groups (men) - there are five but I am missing one: barati (eldest), baradomo, ..., baratingi (youths), baradogono (boys) [source Famoudou Konate]

b) the key parts are the dunumba and kenkeni, the jembe soloist essentially marking the dance transitions. We would call these parts off-beat, which is why Westerners have such a hard time playing these rhythms, even though the beat is strongly marked by the dancers' steps. To complement the kenkeni rhythmic figure, and without going into notation details, the dunumba evolves around a central theme (such as 00.xx.00.xx.xx.xx.xx.xx), switching to continuous (00.00.00.00) during the echauffement. Aside from set parts, there are many individual variations where the dunumba player himself demonstrate his strength.

INFORMATION RELATED TO SPECIFIC DUNUMBAS:

Bada: my understanding is this is not a rhythm as such, rather a phase (echauffement) or signal the players use to enlarge the circle when it has become too crowded and they can't properly play [source Delmundo Keita].

Balan-sonde: is an exception among the Dununba rhythms, for it may be played as part of the circumcision festival, during which the women may also dance. While the men dance the customary Dununba steps, the women dance the steps for Soli. Balan is the name of a village in the region of Kouroussa; sonde means "robbers". The residents of this village are jokingly called robbers. (Rhythmen Der Malinke)

Bando Djei: Amidst all the praises addressed to N'na Dodo, the goddess known as Nakouda or Koudaba is now honored. Worshipped by the people of Hamanah, mother Kouda is particularly invoked during the feast of Boleh pond in Baro, a village situated between Kouroussa and Kankan. This is the occasion to thank her with offerings for wishes granted or to implore her for success in the future. (Mogobalu)

Bandogialli: is the name of a type of monkey with a white tail. For this dance the dancers a white collar with a white tuft, symbolizing the white tail of the monkey. With quick up and down movements of the shoulders, they impart a quick rocking motion to the collar. Bandogialli is danced exclusively by the Barrati-s. (Rhythmen Der Malinke)

Bolo Konondo: The title of this rhythm describes hand movements of the dance. Bolokonondo means "nine hands". (Rhythmen Der Malinke) Literally, nine fingers. This rhythm is called this in reference to the structure and to the movements of the dance. (Hamanah)
Demosoni Kelen: This is translated by "a young girl". The players apostrophise the girls with allusive mockery of a decidedly sexual character. The girls pay them back in their own kind, casting doubt frequently on the quality of the percussionist’s sticks.

Dunun Gbe: is the oldest known Dunumba; Famoudou says "that it is the mother of all the Dunumba’s variations". (Hamanah)

Donaba: or Great Dancer, was the nickname for Maria Magbwe, a woman of Famodou’s village, who was famed for her inventive qualities. A song that is dedicated to her says "Marianna, come out with a new dance for us!"

Gberedu: Name of a canton of Hamanah.

Gbunkundo: expresses a fight, a blow to the head, with the dancers miming a fight. They strike each other as they dance the tests between the different age groups and often regulate personal problems in the same way; fatal accidents, however, often occurred before independence.

Kadan: this is a ballet arrangement, not a traditional dunumba [source Famoudou Konate]

Konowule(n) I is dedicated to a man who was very rich and strong. The djembefola has ensured that this name will go down in history, as will that of a griot who sang for him that "it is thanks to your mother that you are what you are".

Konowule(n) II a second rhythm dedicated to the powerful man.

Kuraba Don: is a sacred bush that is considered to be a god, and in front of which people come to make requests or vows of all sorts, dealing with family, money, business, the hunt....Sacrifices are carried out. "As soon as you are in it, says Famoudou, your body begins to feel something..." The procession to the bush is carried out to this rhythm.

Nantalomba: A song of provocation and insults of the Baratingi, the oldest of the young people in the village, toward the Baradogono, or younger ones. The youngest are compared to a spider with it’s legs pulled off called Nantalomba to get them to fight. The Baratingi consider themselves to be the true owners of the Bara (space for dancing) and the challenges between the different age groups occur when the dance takes place. (Mogobalu)

Taama: means to walk like the people of from Hamanah and is the name of a rhythm that depicts this.

Takosaba: goes with the dancers steps as they perform the same movement four times at the start of the dance (Hamanah) The title of this rhythm refers to three significant movements done in the first three repetitions of the 12 pulse rhythm (Rhythmen Der Malinke)

Takonani: literally "take four times". Like Takosaba, this is a reference to the structure of the dance. (Hamanah)

Balakulanya / Söli lente

Balakulanya is traditionally played at wedding parties, where is often speculated on the fertility of this marriage. Also the rhythm is played, like the Söli, at circumcision ceremonies. Sometime continues all the three days before the ceremony. Some claim that the Sangban and Dun Dun roles as written below are actually switched (sound good also!). Two songs:

1: Aïti iwuliba Dembati iti wuliba söli bara se, Aïti iwuli ba, aïti iwuli ba söli bara se

   Get up, mothers of the children! ; the Söli is about to come.

2 : Balakulanya denkolide, aya yeye so dina, solo : Kingfisher-bird, when will I have a child of my own?

Balan Sondé

Balan Sondé is a Dununba-rhythm from the Malinke-people in Guinea: "Balan" is a village near Kouroussa, "sondé" means thief. The inhabitants of the village are called thieves in the song that goes with this rhythm (teasing). Balan Sondé is an exception within the Dununba-rhythm-family. It’s played on circumcision-festivities where both men and women dance. While the men are dancing dunumba-steps, the woman are dancing the söli-steps.

Bandogialli / Bando Djeï

Bandogialli is a Dununba-rhythm from the Malinke in the Hamana-region in Guinea. It is also known as Bando Djeï. Bandogialli is the name of some kind of ape-family (Bando Djeï) with a white tail. The dancers have a ring around their neck with white hair, crests or "sheeps-beards" attached to it, that remember to the white tail of the ape. As the shoulders of the dancer move up and down the white sheep-beard seesaws along. Drew Ravey names "Gbandon" as the same rhythm.

From the Mögöbalu-CD from Mamady Keïta:
Amidst all the praises adressed to N´na Dödö, the goddess known as Nakouda or Koudaba is now honoured in the song below Worshipped by the people of Hamana, mother Kouda is particulary invoked during the feast of Bölèh pond in Baro, a village situated between Kouroussa and Kankan. This is the occasion to thank her with offerings for wishes granted or to implore her for succes in the future.

Bolokonondo

Bolokonondo is one of the Dununba-rhythms. This one, the Bolokonondo means "nine hands", (according to Famoudou’s Berlin-CD) or "nine fingers"(according to Mamady’s Hamamana-CD) which meaning must become clear if you’ll ever see the dance. The rhythm takes a cycle of 84 pulses divided over 7 groups of 12 pulses. To give a call is only allowed in the 7th group.

The first two Dundun-, Kenkeni- and Sangban-patterns are "translated" from the transcriptions in the booklet from the "Museum of Berlin CD" of Famoudou Konaté. The according bell-patterns are added in a logical way. Here are three cycles with a slightly different Dundun-pattern.

Sangban / Dundun variation 3
The Bolomba (Bolomba) is not a traditional rhythm coming from one of the 'tribes' and used for some special occasion/rite. It is based on a rhythm played on the instrument M'bolon or Bolon. The M'bolon is an instrument made of a calabash, with a stick mounted on it and holding 3 strings (sometimes 4). You may think of it as the bass in the range of the traditional string instruments. It is usually used as a bass accompany in melodic pieces. The "National Ensemble Instrumental" of Guinea uses it in many pieces. Arafan Touré, has transferred this to the rhythm on drums. He has been teaching different variations in time.

Dalah

The word "Dalah" is referring to both a pond and a rhythm. The rhythm is played in honoring the women-fishers. Only the men use boats for fishing so the women have to enter the water with their nets and have to face all kinds of dangers.
Dalfo

Dalfo is a rhythm made by Steffanus Kor, a Dutchman living in France. He thinks it’s a waste to invent specific djembé patterns to it. To play with more players one could split the Sangban and Dundun pattern to two patterns, each to play by different players.

Damba

Damba, a Malinke pre-marriage rhythm, played on the occasion of the bride’s ritual bath before the marriage ceremony. This rhythm has the signature “Dununba Family”-kenkeni part. “Dununba” rhythms are primarily danced by men as a display of strength and beauty. Damba is traditionally played for a young woman preparing for marriage. The break is the garden-variety 12/8 one, not normal signature “Dununba” break (sstsss).

Eh damba n’nya ko la damba leila, eh damba n’nya ko la damba leila eh damba n’nya ko la damba leila, kore kore ji da ko man di, damba la ko la fisa

Eh the river bank, I want to wash my face by the river bank (3X)
the wash-water is not sweet, it’s good to wash by the river bank.

Notes on the lyrics:
The sense of line four is that water you have washed in, "ji da ko," contains the dirt which has left your body. Now that it has the dirt it is "not sweet" - "man di" - "sweet" meaning, by implication, "clean" or "interesting." The imagery is of life before marriage. The singers tell the young bride-to-be that what she has literally and figuratively left behind in the wash water is no longer interesting. In essence, the song tells the young woman that it's time to leave behind the things of childhood and embrace her new identity as a wife. The lyric is a good example of Mande rhetorical techniques of metaphor and indirection.

The partial translation provided in the CD liner notes renders the first line as "I wash my face." The lyrics themselves are somewhat ambiguous as to who is singing, the bride-to-be or the other villagers. If they are "n’nya," then they mean "my face." If, instead, they are "I’nya," they mean "your face." In either case, the sound indicating possession, "n" for "my" or "I" for "your," is somewhat hidden by the singers' pronunciation in the context of the song. Both translations work.

Notes on the performance:
Washing is very important in Mande (and in many other West African peoples’) ritual, both daily rituals and special rites of passage. On a daily basis, Mande people wash their hands immediately before eating, a cleansing which is especially important hygenically because they eat with their hands. A large calabash full of water is kept by the eating spot so everyone can wash their hands before reaching into the communal plate. But washing the body has symbolic power as more than removing sweat and soil. Washing also bears the meaning of personal transformation and inner purification. That is, through washing, one becomes more like what one is supposed to be. A young man washes as part of the circumcision ritual to symbolically leave behind his childhood and assume the mantle of adulthood. A young bride washes away her girl self as she prepares to enter her husband’s home as wife and, soon, mother as well. Mande Muslims wash to purify themselves for their daily prayers, to make themselves and their prayers acceptable to Allah. Understanding the symbolic importance of the washing referred to in the song can help us perform the piece with a more authentic feel.
Famoudou’s performance of Damba begins with a solo voice singing in solemn and reverential tones. The solemnity seems appropriate to the occasion. A young woman preparing to enter her husband’s house may well feel joy and excitement, but also some fear of the unknown hardships to come and sadness at the loss of childhood freedoms and the comforts of her parents’ home. When the drums enter, the mood changes to one of vigorous movement forward. The drums urge the young woman on to embrace her new life and to allay her fears. The music itself might be seen as an act of transformation as well. The sound of the drums and song sonically "wash" the young woman, separating her past from her future. The liner notes for the CD also indicate that this piece is played on the return from the river bank, hence one might also hear this rhythm as a song of welcoming. (Thanks to Adam Rugo for this additional information and the explanation on differance in the sangban)

The sangban part is very similar to the sangban for Dunungbe - the bell is the same - but in this piece the sangban has one additional note. The dununba drum also plays three, rather than two, two-note phrases. You can distinguish between Damba and Dunungbe by the pitch relationships in the ensemble rhythm:

Demosoni Kelen

Demosoni Kelen is a Dununba-rhythm: "Demosoni Kelen is translated by "a young girl". The players apostrophise the girls with allusive mockery of decidedly sexual character. The girls pay them back in their own kind, casting doubt frequently on the quality of the percussionists' "sticks." " (text in booklet with Mamady Keita’s Hamana-CD)

Dibon II

This is one of the many rhythms played for the farmers. Dibon is a couple of birds; male and female. During daytime they are together but at night they each find their own tree to sleep in. In the morning, as they want to join, one sings and the other responds while flying to the first. The melody of their song was heard by hunters and put to a rhythm when they came back in the village. After that it became a use to accompany the farmers, returning from the fields. The second Kenkeni-pattern is a fine addition to the rhythm. The song is not specific for this rhythm, but sung on Famoudou’s CD Malinke Rhythms and Songs.

Ja eh kanje ulalale ja eh, ana fefo la luko kanje ulalale, mo kelen tate dunjadi come on let’s play the fefo (kalebas) together, the world is not for one person, the world is for every one.

Djelidon / Djelifoli / Sanja / Lamba

Djelidon (dance of the djeli), Djelifoli (rhythm of the djeli), Sanja and Lamba are all names for the Mali dance / rhythm that used to be danced exclusively by the Djeli, the Griot. The dance was accompanied only by a balafon or kora. Nowadays also djembé and dunduns are played. In Mali only two dunduns are used: the Kenkeni and the Dundun. Below, the sangban pattern the Malinke added is also presented. The rhythm starts slowly (like many Mali dances). In this part the feel is slightly different to the faster part, and there is a slight delay for the 2nd pulse in the pattern (see djembé 1). In the solo´s there is a strong accent on the 7th pulse (in the 2nd beat). The different teachers that thought me this rhythm presented small differences in the patterns, but the melody compares.

NAME OF RHYTHM: Lamban, Lamba, Lambambaa, Lanbango, Lambango, Lambang, Jali, Jeli Foli, Jaldon, Dialidon, Diely-Don, Griot

COUNTRY: All Mande countries (Guinea, Mali, Burkina Faso, Ivory Coast, The Gambia and Senegal)

REGIONAL/ETHNIC GROUPS: Mande

PURPOSE/BACKGROUND:

Here’s my understanding of Lamban (sometimes spelled Lamba or Lambango in The Gambia), also known as Jeli Don (Dance of the Jelis) or simply Griot (a term that originally appeared in French travel writing in the 17th century referring to jelis or the Wolof or Fula equivalent):

It has origins on the balafon as a piece created by and for jelis (Maninka hereditary professional musicians), specifically the Kouyate lineage. If you want to praise a Kouyate, all you need to do is play Lamban. How and when the dundun came along with Lamban is impossible to speculate upon - maybe it even started out on dundun, but there are no oral traditions about this. At any rate, it makes the most sense that the jembé is a later accretion to Lamban. The crux of the problem is: when jembé players played along with balafon and dundun players, why did they choose a 4/4 generic accompaniment pattern (albeit played at times with a triplet feel)? I can’t see any basis for an answer to this question yet.
Dansa was played to encourage workers during agricultural labor and Lamban was played by jelis to celebrate when the fruits of that labor (the harvest) was shared with them. There does seem to be a close connection between Lamban and Dansa, but the historical explanation is unclear. On Djimo Kouyate’s cassette he has the dundun go into Dansa during Dialidon (Jelidon), and that is typical. The bilingual article "Pre-theatre et rituel: National Folk Troupe of Mali" in African Arts, Spring 1968 vol. 1, no. 3, pages 31-37, written by Jean Decock, shows a drawing and photo of Dansa dancers indicating it is danced by girls from Khaso (Xaso) to celebrate the harvest. (Eric Charry)

During Sunjata’s time (13th century), there was an occasion when all the balaphon players gathered together. They said, "We should have our own tune, which we can dance to ourselves". So it was on that day they invented "Lambango" for the jalibas to dance to. It became a general tune for all jalis, which they used to play and dance to, to entertain their heroes, kings, and patrons.

Although it originated as music for the balaphon, it was also played on the kontingo (lute). There was a kontingo player named Lamin Dambaketeh who modified "Lambango" to its present style, changing the tune a bit. Lamin Dambaketeh was about to marry a very famous jali woman, Bantang Kuyate, who was an excellent singer and historian. One day, Lamin left his village to visit Bantang. Unfortunately, before he arrived, she died and was buried. Upon his arrival, he was told the sad story. He asked the people to show him Bantang’s grave. He went there with his kontingo and played a special version for his dead fiancee.

"All is possible, Bantang Kuyate (but) Beauty will not prevent death, Bantang Kuyate"

This modified version of the melody has since become the standard "Lambango" and the original version is no longer played. (Lynne Jessup)

In past times, Lambambaa was played as a celebration of the culture of the Jaliyya. Unlike the vast majority of songs in the traditional repertoire, which are centered around non-jali figures, Lambambaa is meant for the members of the jaliyya in the village in which it is performed, as the men play the kora and balo, and the women dance and sing. Today this song is extremely popular in the Mandinka area, and especially in Gambia where it has been adapted to include lines that call for the populace to pull together for the good of the country. (Morikeba Kouyate)

Lamban is one of only several kora pieces that was created by jalis for their own entertainment. The piece has not been traced to any other particular story or legend, and probably originated on the balaphon. Malian jalis often play this classic piece to relate any event they may wish. Lamban is also played in Suata tuning (a kora tuning). (Much of kora music is based on short cycles of finger movements called kumbengo. These kumbengo may be continuously developed within a piece with slight variations in rhythm and melody. Another important element of kora playing is birimintingo, or downward spiraling melodic runs, which can be fast and highly ornamental in nature.) (Amadu Jobarteh)
This is supposed to be one of the oldest tunes in the Manding repertoire. "The musicians didn’t compose this for any patron, they did it for themselves. They would just sit down with their wives and feel happy, and their wives would dance and sing.". Lambango is originally a balaphon tune, in Hardino tuning. (another kora tuning; this recording is a kora performance) (Jaliology)

A griot song and dance celebrating the Griots themselves, praising God for giving them the art of music. Griots rejoice in this ancient song that is played in many villages, especially on moonlit nights. (Jali Kunda)

This song praised the Jali (Oral Historians) who keep alive the tribal culture of the people of West Africa (Vieux Diop)

This tune is dedicated to griots whenever they host a ceremony (M'Bady Kouyate)

This rhythm is played by the griots, a class of travelling musicians, poets and story tellers whose duties include the recitation of family and tribal histories. (Khassonka Dunun)

Lamba is the dance of the Jalis, Keepers of the Oral Tradition. Lamba is a spiritual dance and rhythm that is used in healing to promote a sound mind and body. (Nurudafina Abena)

Lamba is a song/dance/ceremony enacted at passages of life and for spiritual cleansings (Sule Greg Wilson)

This music is played by the Griots for Griots, also known as Djelis. They say Allah did a good thing in creating the status of Djelli. (Yaya Diallo)

Dialidon is traditionally the special rhythm for only griot families. Today it is popular and danced by many people in the cities and villages. However, the song that accompanies the music is specifically to honor griot members. (Djimo Kouyate)

One of few songs designed to entertain griot clan members, griot families only play this song when amongst themselves. Lambang is accompanied by the Jalidon, the griot dance. When the moon is bright the men come out and play the kora and the balaphone while the women dance and sing the Lambang song. Music is created by God and God created us to play good music and dance. (Mandeng Tunya)

In Mali, Lamba is played entirely on dunun; in Guinea and Senegal it is played by djembé and dunun together. It is a celebration and processional rhythm, One version is the "Kings Lamba" used by rulers and chiefs, another is the "Dance of the Griots" which is danced and played for the Jeli or griots; the traditional oral historians, praise singers, ambassadors and advisors of West Africa. (Impala)
A Bambara/Manding rhythm (with it’s accordant songs, dances, clothes, talismans, and so forth) played at rituals of major passages in life - marriage or circumcision for example. A royal court dance of gesture and protocol where the dancer gives praise to the almighty chiefs, kings, queeens and so on. The introduction is a series of praises and salutations. (Christine Reagen Rosales)

A widely known song about the joys of being a jeli. The lyrics refer to a familiar expression which stresses the importance of the jeli to social cohesion: "Jeliya, o ye jalla di, ni jalla wulila, kulusi be wuli" (The art of jeliw is like a belt; if you take it away, the trousers fall down). (Ana Be Kelen)

That’s another very old song. I don’t know who composed it. There are lots of new ideas in this version, to see how it goes with the band. The song comes from Mali. If a musician, a jali, likes to marry a jali woman, then the day of the marriage all the jalis come together and play this song, and dance. It’s a song for the jalis. (Dembo Konte)

Song of the Jelis (Mali-Guinee) God himself entrusted the jelis with their mission just as he created invisible spirits and mortal humans. A jeli cannot fear telling the truth to men who, one day, will return to the earth since the jeli’s words are immortal. Hear ye, I know a land where men scrape the hard earth without complaining and women reap immense fields of sadness. In this land, babies die of hunger and mothers cry softly. (Cisse)

Donaba, the Malinke word for "Great (female) Dancer" is a very ancient Dunumba-rhythm. The song is from more recent date (about 1950), it is in honour of a great dancer living those days in the village were Famoudou Konate was born. Her name was Mariama Gbe and she invented sometimes new dances and had "Donaba" as a nickname.

Fanga

Fanga is a welcome rhythm, from Liberia that has been thought by Babatunde Olatunji, a West African Percussion teacher who, with his lessons and personality, inspired many Djembé players in the United States.

When a drummer plays the low part of this rhythm, he mimes the action of a cook pulling hot pieces of food from a steaming pot. Dinner will be served!

The transcriptions are from various email exchanges through the Djembé-L mailing list. The song he used to sing to accompany the rhythm is in the Yoruba language.

Foro-Bingé

Foro-Bingé is a rhythm that is traditionally played by the blacksmiths of Northern Ivory Coast (especially the villages Korhoga, Mandially and Sinematjali). There are two parts a 6/8-part and a 4/4-part. It’s played quite slowly. The dance steps in the first part are on the Kenkeni-drum. This rhythm used to be played once a year during the annual blacksmith-festival. All the blacksmiths showed their best products of that year. At first there were no bass-drums involved, but instead a lot of iron bell’s. And that’s something you could expect with all these blacksmiths!

Fulafare (Foula Faré, Yoleli) is a dance of the Fula, the Peuhl. The name "Fula Fare" in Susu means "Fulani dance". The name the Fula use for this dance is "Yoleli".

"The Peuhl are a nomadic people living in an area stretched from the north of Guinea to Niger. The cattle is walking free and has to be rounded up for the night. The shepards believe that by playing, singing, drumming Fula Fare the animals are easily assembled" (John Boeyen).

"Yoleli, it is a rhythm played at the "dennaboo" (naming ceremony), which the Fula celebrate on the 7th day of a newborn’s life. A big feast is held early in the day. After that a sheep or goat is sacrificed. An elder blesses the child and announces the name, to much cheering. Nowadays the rhythm is also played at weddings and other celebrations" (Drew Ravey).

Griot

Griot / Griotte: French words for male and female traditional bards and praise singers of West Africa. In Mandinka, a key language of the best known griot culture, they would be called jeli or jali, and jelimoussou, or jalimuso.

Griot is like a journalist, a history journalist, using singing and dancing. In the old days, griots worked for the kings of Africa, singing and dancing in court and traveling through the land to tell stories from history and current events. The job and the traditions were passed on from father to son.

Traditionally, djembe is not a griot instrument like the bala, the ntama and jalidunun (griot dunun).

Kadan

Kadan, a Malinke-rhythm from the Kankan, Kouroussa and Siguiri areas in Guinee, is one of the (about 20) dunumba-rhythms. The dunumba-rhythms are traditionally only danced by men: "The dance of the strong men". The Kadan is a dance for the bilakoros (non-circumcized children). "Kadan" (liana bracelet in Malinke) is both the name of these anklets (6 to 8 in number) and of the dance. The bilakoros are the specialists in this dance, which people come and watch like a show. The anklets clink against each other, while the (solo)phrases of djembé, dundun and sangban correspond to the steps.

I yo dala oo-ee, san da la oo, I yo ya na dja bilakoro jee don da
Bafa bilakoro !, kanti da dinda

..here come the bilakoros, dancing the Kadan....

Kakilambé

Kakilambé is a mask-dance of the Baga-people that live in the coastal area (Boke-region) of Guinea. Originally it was played on the Baga-drums that are similar to the djembé.

"Kakilambé is a very important mask of the Baga people, that appears only once a year. The spirit of the Kakilambé is revered as the protector against evil entities. He appears to make important declarations about the present and the future. A priest of the Kakilambé is like a translator, since the mask doesn’t talk directly to the people. It’s a big day when the mask appears. Everybody comes to listen. Slowly the mask emerges from the forest, together with the priests. The people have gathered and are waiting. When all of the people bow, the mask grows to a height of five meters! It holds a string for each individual family of the village, and the other end is held by a member of each family.

When the rhythm gets fast, the priest and some of the older men dance around the mask. The priest receives the information. Then he gives the musicians a sign, they play a break, and then the rhythm is played slower and softer. Afterwards he passes on the information given to him by the mask." (Uschi Billmeier: Mamady Keïta, A life for the djembé).

"These days Kakilambé, the terrifying god of the Baga, is nothing more than a memory causing a few shivers in the minds of the elders. But for centuries he ruled the life of Bagatai; he was the lord of the waters, of rain, of wind and of fire. Every seven years he came out of the sacred forest, his arrival announced by thunder and the calls of the fetish priests, to appear to the terrified people and, speaking through the local soothsayer, addressed the assembled villagers.

First, he showed his anger against those who had behaved contrary to morality and virtue, by making himself small. The people, lying prostrate on the ground to show their repentance, asked for his forgiveness and swore to obey him.

"Kelyo! Kelyo! Kakilambé! Kelyo!" (Get up, Kakilambé, rise!)
Then Kakilambé, reassured that he was still lord of the children of the Bagatai, just as he had been of their fathers and their fathers' fathers, and swelling with joy, grew big again, and predicted seven years of happiness and prosperity. Then, accompanied by songs and dances of joy and gratitude, he disappeared for another seven years. So, "for seven years the land will be prosperous and the women fertile" Kakilambé has said so. But, whether the land would in fact be prosperous and the women fertile, depended on the primary power of the men, and of the SENGBE (sacred drums). The man dances, showing his strength, his virility, his confidence and his determination to work with respect for the customs of their people. And, as a start to the favours Kakilambé has promised his people, the goddess of fertility suddenly appears: Nimba with the enormous breasts. The men shout with joy, the women and the girls soon to be married bring offerings and sing:

"O Nimba! The belly without child, is like a cinder in the desert wind, like a leaf in a bush-fire.
O Nimba! goddess of fertility, o Nimba! you who make the sap rise in the dust
Here are my breasts, let them be the same as yours
Here is my belly, that the sap of the Baga may continue to rise"

And, in a vibrant frenzy, the men and the women of the Baga are united in complete communion, certain that they are protected by the gods."

(text from a leaflet of the Worldtour of the Ballet de Guinée, ('65-'67).

"The Baga are only a very small etnic group and there are no more than about 32.000 Baga living in Guinea. Frederick Lamp, in his book, "The Art of the Baga"(1996), says that Kakilambé is called "a-Mantsho-`no-Pön" by the Baga and is "the supreme male spirit of the Sitemu subgroup" (of the Baga). Dr.Lamp says that the word Kakilambé is actual a word in the Susu-language meaning "Reaching as high as the copal tree". There are dozens of songs to the Kakilambé-rhythm; this one is the welcoming song: Welcome to the Kakilambé-mask!

Mai’m bo, mai’m bo mama, mai’m bo Kakilambé kekumbe

Kassa

Kassa (Cassa) is a harvest-dance of the Malinke-people in East Guinea. The word means granary. During harvest-time the farmers go to the fields, that are sometimes far away from the village. A camp is made for as long as needed. Some woman come to prepare the meals (and to sing). During the day the drummers play Kassa to support the workers in the field. When the harvest is completed there is a big party in the village, called Kassalodon.

Another custom (according Famoudou Konaté) that is connected with this work is that a girl (the prettiest in the village) hangs her shawl on a stick at the end of the field. The worker who reached this shawl the first (while working) spends the night with the girl. This meeting is not supposed to have a sexual character, for if the girl would get pregnant, the man would be beaten in public.

Illawuli woo konko daba, kondon tilu barama
Illawuli woo konko daba, Kolankoma sènekèlalu barama
Wake up farmer, the meal has arrived, wake up farmer, the meal is here

Kassa Djibo

It often happens that a rich villager employs youths to till his fields, paying them with the gift of a goat or cow. Since the fields are often far from the village, the workers often spend an entire week out at the field, constructing simple shelters in the bush. Drummers accompany the workers from dawn till dark, using Kassa, a rhythm specifically dedicated to the common folk of the village.

Kawa

Kawa is a rhythm of the medicine man of the Malinke people from the region of Faranah in Guinea. It is played during circumcision to protect the young initiates from evil spirits. For this rhythm, the djembe is accompanied by the bala, the ntama and the file.

Kebendo

The Kebendo-rhythm and -song is one of the women addressing the men and warning them not to take more than one wife. The woman asks themselves what they all shall do to prevent their men to marry more than one wife. It was during the time of dictator Sékou Touré that it was decided that women had to approve if their husband wanted to marry a second wife. The song became popular then. For a long time only the first djembé-pattern was used to accompany the song. Famoudou Konaté added all the rest (Rhythmen und Lieder aus Guinea, by Thomas Ott and Famoudou Konate). Here is a part of the song-lyrics. (The bold-part is sung by men here, and other by women) The word "fila" (two) is later on replaced by "saba" (three), nani (four), lolu (five) and wörö (six)

E ! Kebendo, oh Laila, Muso fila ta lu, wo ma nyin, wo ma nyin

The men (the gang)! Now what! To marry two women, that's not good, that's not good

When finally the men sing about "kelen" (one) wife, the women reply with "wo ka nyin" (that's good!)

Kemoba

Kemoba is grandfather in the Malinke-language. The rhythm and its song illustrate differences between youth and their grandparents. The grandfather appeals to responsibilities in life. Young people react by saying: "That's really something for the old people to say (and it is not from this time to say that). At the other hand they have to admit also that the wisdom of the old is valuable too.

The Kennefoli is played during circumcision festivity. It is a tribute to the ones that carry out the circumcisions. It’s much slower than the Söli, which is often preceded by the Kennefoli.

Konden I

There are different explanations about the cultural background of the Malinke rhythm Konden (Konen, Konde, Kunde, Konding). Some people claim it’s a mask-dance, others say it’s a dunumba (this is not necessarily conflicting). The typical dununamba-kenkeni-pattern is not there, but the kenkeni-part of Konden II could be interpreted as a "half-speed" kenkeni of a dunumba. It could be that Konden II is the dununba-piece and Konden I is the mask-piece. Because some of the great drummers have a different idea about the meaning / background you will find some of their interpretations here:

I. Konden is a (Malinke) mask which walks fast and dances. Konden is a mask-dance staged for young men between the age of fifteen en twenty years. Konden runs after the guys, and when he catches them hits them with a rod. In earlier times the dance was only accompanied by singing and clapping. The mask-dancer holds twigs with leaves in his hands. The mask looks truly frightening and the little children get scared, their fear intensified further because of threats made by the adults. "If you are not nice the Konden will come and get you!". Each region has changed the rhythm somewhat, especially the dunun.
(from "Mamady Keita; a life for the djembé")

II. Konden is the mask that protects the older bilankoro in the days leading up to their circumcision. Very handsome, he is also a fine dancer, which accounts for his popularity amongst the young. The best Konden are to be found in the current prefecture Siguiri (upper Guinea) and the village of Banfeleh in particular. There is a reputation of inventing the finest dancemovements, but also of being quick to strike out with his riping crop to punish naughty children. He is somewhat like the "bogeyman".
(part from text from Mogobalu-CD from Mamady Keita)

III. Konden (Konding) is a Doundounba rhythm
(sais Koungban Konde Master Drummer and Leader of Percussionist De Guinee according to Baba Aidoo)

IV. Konden is most definitely not a Dununba rhythm, It is a mask dance, and was performed as part of traditional end-of-Ramadan festivities.
(according Jim Banks who asked Famoudou Konate).

V. Mamoudou "Delmundo" Keita, who teaches in the Hamana-style from Upper Guinea, has made one CD "House of Roots". Track 3, "Yaya" (Doundoun gbe, Konden, Bandogialli, Bolokonondo) is dedicated to his father Fa Daman Keita: ".....He was also reknown as a great dancer of the traditional dance of the strong men / warriors. Here it’s brought together in four different doundounbarrhythms...." Delmundo also sais: "Konden is the only Dununba that is played fast".

VI. Serge Blanc’s book, 'Le Tambour Djembé' lists Konde as a member of the Dununba group from Kouroussa.
VII. Youssouf Koumbassa on his video 'Wongai' also states in the introduction to the Doundoumba that it is called Konde.

VIII. In the book Traditional West African Rhythms from Åge Delbanco, the rhythm Konde is annotated. Sources are different members of the Konate-family. It says: "Dununba from Guinea (Malinke)".

Konkoba I

The Konkoba (Concoba) is a rhythm connected to the farming. Farmers are working / dancing on this Konkoba-rhythm. The Konkoba Dundun is also played when the farmers go back to the villages. Another way that the rhythm was used was to honour mighty or rich farmers. There are differences between the regions (Kouroussa, Mandiani, Faranah) in the explanation of Konkoba. Also have musicians made their own musical interpretation of Konkoba. Konkoba II is a dance-variation and Konkoba III is a very fast one, in 4 beats, played in ballets.

"Konkoba rhythms being played while working in the fields. Konkoba is also played in honor of a powerful and rich farmer and for this reason the rhythm is also known as the "rhythm of the good workers". The word Konkoba means forest, jungle." (Mamady Keita: A life for the Djembé)

"A rhythm to support the farmers in the fields with the "Daba" (the hoe). A young man is acknowledged as a "Konkoba" for his strength and speed working with his Daba. He has many fetishes and is therefore feared. The word "Konkoba" refers both to the person and the rhythm." (text in booklet with CD Guinea: malinke rhythms and songs (volume I) from Famoudou Konate.

"The fields have been prepared for planting, Konkoba has completed his work and returns to the village. He’s wearing a head-dress of antelope horns, and a hide adorned with bells, mirrors and cowry shells around his hips that jingles with every step. His adornments have protected him and given him the strength to complete his difficult task. Konkoba is also the name of the rhythm that animates the one who is returning home, and the rest of the village, to dance." (Text in booklet with CD Hamana Foli Kan of Famoudou Konate).

In most areas the bass drum section consists only of two drums and according patterns (sangban and dundun). Kenkeni patterns are added in different ways. So this gives some possibilities:

Here the sangban pattern is in a subtle way inspired by what is normally the Doundoun pattern.

You can make the konkoba rhythm on two djembé’s (6 and 7):

Koreduga / Kotedjuga / Komodenu

This rhythm originates from the border area from Mali and Guinea. Of course there are some different interpretations of the basic idea of Koreduga / Kotedjuga / Kotedjuga. Serge Blanc names the Bamana ethnic group in the Segou area the origin of this rhythm, Mamady Keita says the Malinke are the traditional performers of this rhythm. It’s a rhythm where the dance is performed by jesters and clowns; people who adorn festivities with their beautiful costumes and performances with humor, acrobatics and mimic art. Komodenu is the name of a song, from the Wassolon region, that has got its place in this rhythm. Komo means fetish and Komodenu refers to the children (or students) of this fetish. When Komo gets out, the woman and children (who are not allowed to see him) stay at the homes.

_E Komodenu, sisa bora Tamaninko_
_Taa wulida komo so la, sisi bora Tamaninko_

Kuku

Originally Kuku (Koukou, Cucu, Coucou) is a circle-dance for the woman, celebrating the return from fishing. To the Beyla and Nzerekore-area, (situated partly in Guinea partly in the Ivory Coast) there was once a Malinke-migration. The Malinke mixed with the local people here and formed the Konianka (Konya, Konyagui or Manian, as the Malinke say) who now speak a Malinke-dialect. This was where the rhythm originally comes from. The rhythm was only played by one low-tuned djembé (see djembé-pattern 1) and one very large solo-djembé. Only later, out of this djembé-pattern, the patterns for the bass-drums evolved.

Nowadays Kuku is very popular all over West Africa and played on many occasions. Because of this popularity the rhythm is known with lots of variétys in the different areas that it’s played. Two songs:

Lauginabee, ee ewontang,
jaga langina bee, o ma la guinee borima

peace for us, peace for the people from Guinea

O ya, itee Kuku foniee

Yes, play the Kuku for me!

Kurabadon

Dunumba-rhythm from the Malinke-people in Guinea. This term means "Holy Bush". The people come and worship the spirit that lives in the bush. They bring offerings and ask questions, for instance about their family, business, hunting, etc. The procession to the forest is accompanied by this rhythm."(Mamady Keïta: A life for the Djembé).
Lafè / Kurubi

The rhythm below is called Lafè in Guinea. It’s a swinging rhythm that invites to dance. Lafè is in the Malinke-language the female dancer that dances outside the circle with a rattle (at the Mendiani - see Famoudou Konate; Rhythmen der Malinke). Kurubi is mentioned in Serge Blanc’s book: “le Tambour Djembé”. Here is written that the rhythm is played by the Jula-people from the Ivory Coast and Burkina Faso. It is played during the festivities ending the Ramadan, especially on the 27th night of the Ramadan. During this night there is special attention for those women who come in the last year before marriage: they can have a big party one more time.

Mamaya

The old Mandingo-dance Mamaya (Mamayah) was very popular in Guinea during the 1940-1960 period. Traditionally it was a very stately dance, that was performed in a club or a group where one was part of. Dressed in gouba’s and embroidered shirts, male and female dancers could express their beauty, while dancing in two circles (men in outer circle, women in inner circle). Dance-steps were made in a majestic way and a handkerchief or decorated stick was used as an attribute. The rhythm started with the singing of a Griot and/or music made with the Balafon, Bolon or Tama. Mamaya is traditionally without an echauffement. Mamady Keïta and Famoudou Konaté have their own interpretations of Mamaya, but the melody compares.

Marakadon

When on festivities by the Malinke or Bambara also the Maraka-people were invited, in hounor of the guests the Marakadon (with the rhythm Marakafoli), the dance of the Maraka, was performed. The Maraka (also known as Soninké or Sarahule) living in the Kayes-region in Mali, are neighbours of the Malinke and Bambara. Some sources claim that the rhythm Tagé, (Tagué or Take) could be the original Mali-rhythm that inspired the Malinke and Bambara for playing the Marakadon. More information about that rhythm could confirm or deny this.

In Mali normally only two Dunduns are used. But the Malinke-people added an accompanying Sangban-pattern.

The lyrics of the song below are dedicated to a king and a princes. It is a reminder to the responsabilitys that they have for their subjects. As their subjects affirm their dependance on their rulers they also express the wish that their rulers will treat them well, for in their traditional society their leaders exercised almost every right over them.

Mendiani

Mendiani is a Malinke-rhythm, played in the areas of Siguiri, Mandiana, Kouroussa and Kankan. The dance is performed by virgins (age 7 - 14). There is a special kostume for this dance. The men carry the girls to the "dance-floor" in the village. There the girls start the dancing. Many villages have got their own "Mendiani"; the girl, for that period the best dancer. When she gets (too) old a successor is pointed out; she learns the mendiani from the elder, at night, outside the village.

Meni

Menie (Menie) is a Malinke rhythm from Guinea that used to be played on the occasion of the birth of a child, or more specific: on the day that a name is given to the child (about one week after it’s been born). There is a song with this rhythm that tells about four masks. Probably this is why Meni is also known as a Mask-dance.

The person whose wish was granted, dresses in a funny way, where the clothing is a mixture of all kinds of pieces that really don’t go together. Namani Namani is a Malinke-rhythm from the Wassolon-area that is very similar to Soli. Main difference is the kenkeni-pattern and of course the meaning of the rhythm / song. I have found two interpretations of the background to this rhythm.

1. "Namani is a rhythm particular to the wizards of the fetish cult. There are two sorts of namah, the namah-idol, that is jealously guarded in a hut and worshipped as the protector of the village against evil minded sorcerers, and the namah-soroh of the Konkoba or great farmers. The namah-soroh is similar to the Bandon Fadima, and it’s power is of use only to the owner. The meaning of the song/text is that the griots and the musical instruments that they will use must be at the height of the powers and talents for the honouring of such a powerfull fetish." (Mamady Keita CD Mögôbalu).

2. Namani is a rhythm accompanying work in the fields and harvest. The horn that leads the dance Namadon, is called Namunda

Nantalomba

A song of provocation and insults of the baratingi, the oldest of the young people in the village, towards the baradögöno or the young ones. The youngest are compared to a spider with its legs pulled off, called Nantalomba, to get them to fight. The baratingi consider themselves as being the true owners of the bara (space for dancing) and the challenges between the different age-groups occur when the dances take place. The circles that correspond to each age-group are laid out concentrically around the tree planted in the middle of the bara. The leader carries a decorated hatchet called djende and a manin fösson, a riding crop braided from hippopotamus skin. When one of the younger boys wishes to join the group of older boys, he moves out of his own circle and dances backwards. He meets the leader of the other group, who asks him "The Way?", to which he answers "It’s marked on the back!" A reciprocal flagellation then follows, that leads either to the boy’s acceptance or rejection by the older group when the men who are present, appreciating the boy’s courage, put a stop to the test. Nantalomba is a dance of the Dunumba-family: the dances of the strong men.

Nantalomba eee, I badaban ikoudoula banankou too do woo, Ido wolo kognouma eee

O you, Nantalomba, Since you stuffed yourself with manioc paste, dance now as you must!
N’Goron / Toubala Kono

N’Goron is a rhythm of the Senufo-people that live in Ivory Coast and Burkina Faso. It accompanies a dance that marks the end of the virginity of the girls.
N'Gri is a rhythm from the Bambara from Mali, where it is normally played with only two drums. Traditionally it used to be played by the feticheurs (magicians). The rhythm starts slowly and it’s tempo is rising continuously going on to a climax. The djembe solo’s are played more and more intensely as well.

Wassolonka (Wasulanke) means "from Wassolon" and Wassolon is an area that covers a region on both sides of the border between Guinea and Mali. It’s a popular rhythm among the Malinke who live in that area.

"Wasulunka (Kirin). The rhythm Kirin from the Wasulun region (a very small region, southwest of Bougouni and near Yanfolila) is called Wasulunka (which means "a person from Wasulun") in Bamako. The song is " n'i den t'i bolo " ("If you have no child").

Wasulun music uses the same pentatonic scale as most Bamana music, which makes it easy to integrate Wasulun into the Bamana repertoire. Most Wasulun singers know how to sing Bamana songs and vice versa ("in contrast it is more difficult to integrate the songs of most Maninka jeli singers (griot heptatonic style) in either a Bamana or Wasulun musical context." - Rainer Polak on the Bamako Foli CD.)

"N’Gri is a Wassoulou dance from the Sigasso area" (Mamadou Kante on the CD "Drums of Mali").

In the book "A life for the Djembé" from Ushi Bilmeier / Mamady Keita the rhythm is sorted to the popular rhythms: "Wassolonka (ethnical group Malinke, Guinea, Wassolon region) means "from Wassolon" and is played at every festival".

"From the etnic group Wassulanke, from the Sikasso region in Mali, this rhythm is played at the end of the harvest. Very popular in the Bamako region" (Serge Blanc in Le Tambour Djembé).

It is possible that Babunicca is a song that is sung with the Wassolonka-rhythm.

"N’gri means something like "Jump" in Bamana because one of the main hallmark dance steps during the middle part of N’gri is a jumping step. N’gri is the premier and first djembe rhythm because it was the first rhythm played on djembe when it came out of hiding. Kumba Sidibe was the first woman to dance N’gri played on djembe. N’gri is from Wassolo that is why it is often called Wassolonka (which means rhythm from Wassolo). N’gri is a very difficult rhythm to master in terms of the solo. The solo is very specific and is speaking Bamana history about Kumba Sidibe and her pregnancy. Ngri has 4 stages from slow to fastest. The 4 parts in order are called: Sensen - N’gri - Kolonbri - Jebenije. It is a very important djembe rhythm for any djembe player to learn if they want to move to a higher level in the music. What I have learned about this rhythm comes from my teacher Abdoulaye Diakite. He is a master and one of the only people alive that has the complete knowledge of this rhythm. I would also recommend Abdoul Doumbia for more info on N’gri.

Beware that micro timing is important in N'Gri.

Toubala Kono

In the N’ Goron rhythm the Toubala Kono song can be used. It is played for baptisms and circumcision ceremonies. This song with its poetically philosophic text speaks of the essential uniqueness of each human being and of how each person has his own faith and particular talents. If solitude is the price of this, this solitude is also freedom, as sings the bird in the deep forest (Mögöbalu-CD by Mamady Keita).

Toubalah Könö djo, ibi ikélé nah, N’né koo Toubalah Könöh djo, ibi ikélé nah

The day before the celebrations for the end of the ramadan, groups of youngsters gather together in their huts. All night long they talk, make jokes and they challenge each other. During the night, the Kondenba, the keeper of the Konden-mask, comes around the hut and the Konden rhythm is played. In the morning Sirankuruni is sung. They go to the village square where the boys whip each other. This practice provides an outlet for the tensions and grudges accumulated between them all along the year. Siran designates a broom, by extension a whip.

Sirankuruni
"..today with the short broom, with the long broom, having had no sleep, we'll whip each other until we have enough..."
Siwé

A welcoming-rhythm and song of the Konyanka-people of Guinea. It’s also used in honour of a personality.
Sobonincun

Sobonincun (Soboninkun, Sobonincu, Sogonincun) is a mask dance. In different areas in West Africa, the meaning of this dance is slightly different. Mamady Keita speaks of the antilope-mask (sobo= antilope, ni= smal, kun=head). The dance is performed by a initiated person to the secret of the mask and a specialist in dancing skills and balance. This specialist often travels from village to village to to this dance, that is usually danced after harvest. The dance is presented on a big sieve that is normally used to sift grains. The dance can last several hours and is rewarded with food and gifts.

In Mali there is a connection to the "Banana ciwara antilope mask" and in the southern parts of West Africa it is connected to the "Pourou society" a secret society for the initiation for the Senufo people, living in Ivorycoast, Liberia and Sierra Leone.

It is actually dangerous to try and give an accurate notation of this rhythm in the way that I use here on the WAP-pages: According to Mamady Keita the rhythm hovers between binary and ternary! Therefore I suggest listening to the examples on the wonderfull CD's of Mamady Keita "Wassolon" and "Balandugu Kan". I hope the given notation can be of help in understanding the problem of "hovering between ternary and binary".

I will give a ternary and a binary interpretation. Vincent Manuelle gave me a notation that he uses. It is a notation able to present better the "hovering between ternary en binary (or better quarternary as he prefers to say). At the end an interesting exercise for two djembé's once presented by Momo Touré during a sobunincun lesson I attended during the "Kakilambe" workshops on the Dutch isle Terschelling in 1998.

Aibo siyalaa wii mogulu Sobodonkanyee

Sobonincun: Ternary:

Sobonincun: Quarternary:
Transcription by Vincent Manuelle:
"Soboninkun is the perfect example for the "partial ternarization": This notation shows how you can play exactly between 4 elementary pulsations per beat and 3 elementary pulsations per beat: it’s as simply as \((3 + 4) / 2 = 3\frac{1}{2}\) (in fact, \(\frac{1}{2} + 3\)). All in this rhythm is normally played with this feeling, except for the call which is played as if it was quaternary, and the solo, that can be ternary, quaternary or anything else of course, depending on the inspiration of the soloist. This "3\(\frac{1}{2}\) feeling", is of course closely related with the concept of microtiming developed by Rainer Polak

Legend:
- there are six patterns here: a call, two djembé patterns and the three patterns for kenkeni, sangban en doun doun
- balls are djembé tones, triangles are djembé slaps
- a black dot inside a ball is a muffled stroke
- an upright line is a bell stroke

About the douns, the way they are played can depend on who plays them. Some will play more ternary and some other more quaternary. The best feeling is when the Dunun players put their strokes right on the djembé accompaniment, if this one is played correctly...

Exercise for two Djembe's: play together within the same time period

Sofa / Limbadji toko

- Sofa is a very old Malinke Rhythm that, according to some, takes you back to the time period in which warriors (in Malinke “Sofa”) rode horses. These warriors had large plate-shape drums (tavela), that were also used for the sending of messages. When Sofa was played, the horses with their warriors "danced" on the rhythm. Sofa was also played when a great warrior or hunter in the village passed away (from: Famoudou Konaté; Rhythmen der Malinke).

- The rhythm was played for the warriors on horseback. It was supposed to support the brave and strong men who went to combat, as well as a praise them for their success and bravery when they came back. In the old days it was accompanied by a Bolon, a string instrument. The Bolon was played by “Griots des Guerre” (war - griots) who knew the story, the song and the praise of the war and warriors since generations. (Uschi Billmeier/Mamady Keïta: A Life for the Djembé).

- Other sources mention the another meaning for Sofa: it was played in honour of the king.

- Limbadji Toko (Fatala; Gongoma Times), is for some a Sofa -variant. It is a rhythm that is played at funerals (of warlords) and refers to people with a lot of perseverance. Limbadji is a word from the Baga-language.

In the song here (from the Möögbalu CD by Mamady Keïta) two songs of praise (to Mamady Keïta) are joined: Kèlèmansa Bon and Warabah. By the use of simile and metaphor the griot evokes to the wild cat, who rules over nature, and to the warlord, as noble as he can be and whose mother could only be an exeptional woman. In the song he uses Nankama, the nickname of Mamady.

Kèlèmansa bon na kolon tê, Nankamah ini woura
Mosso bè tê kèlèmansa dén södon, N’nanin Bolonfo lè lah
N’anindiya lémaa, Woulou djan na kani magni, Yééé warabah ma naa?,
Aaa mankan, Yé warabah lé koo, Mankan yé warabah le fèè !
Allah ta Allah bali koo têè, Nankamah ini woura!, An nani djya léma, Bélbélé ini woura!

The house of the warlord is empty! Good evening to you Nankama.
Not just any woman can give birth to the son of a warlord I, I have come to play the bolon, I have come full of hope, distance is bad for friendship, it is not good to humiliate he who is popular Has the wildcat not arrived? It’s really he, the wildcat who makes the echoes resound. We are talking about a famous nobleman, the wildcat who makes echoes resound For Allah noting is impossible, Good evening to you Nankama We have come full of hope, Good evening to you, giant!

Sökö

Sökö is a rhythm of the Komanko-people in the Faranah-region. Nowadays it’s played often in the whole North of Guinea. The rhythm accompanies the dance of the bilakoro (they who are not circumcised yet). In some regions it’s played during the months before circumcision, elsewhere it’s played the day before initiation after the heads of the bilakoro have been shaved and presents have been given.

Söli des Manían

This Söli rhythm is danced and played at the circumcision ceremonies. It comes from the Beyla and Nzereko area, that is partly in Guinea and the Ivorycoast. To this area there used to be a lot of migration by the Malinke. The ethnic groups mixed into the Konianka ethic group (also called Konya, Konyagui or Manían, as the Malinke say). The lyrics of the song below have a symbolic meaning: The addressing of the hunters means that no man let any provocation go unpunished (Hawk, can’t you see it!?).

G'béngbe dé n’i ikana sissè taal Kööi ma ayé waah
Aï ma ayé? Donsolou, Aï ma ayé waah

Söli (and also the Wassolon Söli) is a rhythm of the Malinke-people from Guinea. It accompanies the rite which precedes initiation (and circumcision) of boys and girls. Playing this rhythm occasionally starts about three months before the ritual. The frequency of playing rises up till ongoing during the last night before initiation. This night the man and women dance all night long. Even though circumcision is practiced more often in the hospital than in the village these days (and is carried out just after birth more often), the significance during the transition-period remains. Apart from Conakry, the capitol of Guinea, in the countryside you will never hear the rhythm without the appropriate rites.

There is a slow version of söli, the söli-lente (see also Balakulanya), where also the elderly people can dance, and a quick söli: the söli-rapide.

Sorsornet

The Sorsornet is a rhythm of the Baga-people. The song that goes with it here expresses young girls gratitude to their mothers. It’s supposed to be sung in the moonlight.

M’baraka felenkoe, N’doro mamuna komna

M’baraka feleko n’gayo n’ gaa, N’doro mamuna komna

N’tapelindoee, n’tapelindoee, n’tapelindoee, n’tapelindoee zinezagona banganiee

Thank you mother, for giving me personality

Don’t worry: I will soon join my husband now

Sometimes this song, which is very difficult to sing properly, is simplified. The meaning is probably slightly different too.

Balafele ko hee, Balafele ko na, Balafele ko nayoma, Balafele ko hee

Tiriba

Tiriba (Triba) is from the Laduma-people, from the Boke- and Boffa area in the West of Guinea. Through the years Tiriba has been given different meanings. In the oldest period Tiriba was a great dancer who performed with a group of percussionists. Dancing in a special costume he was called “the Tiriba”. This Tiriba-dance is no longer danced, but the rhythm is played very often. Later the rhythm got popular with initiations, as girls became woman; a dance where mothers and their daughters dance together. The rhythm is a ternary rhythm, but there is also a "modern" binairy version (by Arafan Touré).

Toro

Toro, a Malinke-rhythm from the Siguiri-region in Guinea is traditionally played after the initiation of boys. The children have been together in a camp for three months and learned the rules and regulations to live as an adult. Some time after the circumcision a great fire is made and the Toro is played. In the earlier days not the djembé but another instrument, the Wassamba was used.

Toro fö n’doni, Toro fö itoro fö nyömaye

Toro fö "name", Toro fö itoro fö nyömaye

Play the Toro "name", there is no one better than you in playing the Toro

Solo 1 (use these elements)
Warba

Warba (or Waraba) is a popular dance of the Mossi-people from Burkina Faso. Originally it was accompanied by the Bendré, a gourd-drum with a sheep-skin. This instrument (in the Youla language also known as Bara) used to be played at the court of the Naba, the Mossi chief. It was often used as an announcing instrument when important messages were announced (play a few lines alternating with the actual announcements). Nowadays it’s more cool to use the djembé instead of the Bendré. Beside this instrument there is the Wiga, (the Mossi-whistle), the Lounga, (the Talking drum), the Dundun and the Kièma (the Mossi iron castangnette). You can use the sangban and the kenkeni for playing the Louanga-pattern. In the dance the accent is on shaking your bottom, and alternating lifting one leg and the other with this shaking.

This Warba I learned during my last stay in Burkina Faso in the village of Latou, near Koudougou. I learned it from Hyacinthe Yameogo, the artistic leader and manager of the orphanage with its musical/dance/theater performance group: "Troupe Lenga" (they visited the Netherlands during the Festival Mundial twice now).

Wassolonka / Bubuninca

Wassolonka means "from Wassolon" and Wassolon is an area that covers a region on both sides of the border between Guinea and Mali. It's a popular rhythm of the Malinke that live in that area. There are some interpretation differences possible. Also there is a resemblance with the rhythm N’ Gri from Mali.

I learned it during the begin-period of my djembé lessons as named Bubuninca. Now it appeared to be Wassolonka but it is possible that Bubuninca is a song that is sung with the Wassolonka-rhythm but I am not sure about that. (Bubuninca is not to be mixed up with Babaninco, a piece that is played on krins for the masks of the woods (on the Nankama CD from Mamady Keïta)).

Note: Djembé 3 (covers the "melody" of Wassolonka)

Wolosodon / Djondon

Wolosodon (Wolosedon, Wolosodan, Djondon, Jondon, Djonfoli) comes from the Kayes region (Stephan Rigert) or from the South - East part of Mali, near the border with Burkina Faso (R.Clark). It means "Dance of the Woloso", dance of the slaves. It concerns the slaves who used to serve at the royal courts of the Mandinka Kings and their families. The dance shows the family honour and family solidarity. There seems to be a quaternaire and a ternary version.

Ternary version of Wolosedon:

Essential is the following pattern / combination of patterns that can be played on a single drum or a combination for two drums:

Yankandi A (ternary)

A Sousou dance of seduction. It is danced during village-festivals, marriages, etc. Yankadi is a slow dance whit boys and girls starting the dance in rows, facing each other. (According to Michael Wall: "In the dance 4 couples at a time dance with each other (and briefly with other partners) and the essential elements are eye contact, flirtatious movements and touching your hand to your partner’s heart.") After a break or a whistle the dance can transform into the Macru-dance, which is fast a where the couples dance individually. The dance alternates between the slow Yankadi and the fast Macru. There is a ternary and a binary-version of Yankadi. The word means: "Here things are fine!"

Yogui

Yogui (Yongui) is a Sousou woman’s dance-rhythm from Lower Guinea. I have two slightly different sources on the cultural background of this rhythm (can anyone clear this?). According to one source Yogui is a mask-dance for older women. The mask is round and with raffia to the ground. Another source claims it’s a dance for young women on a pre-wedding evening. It’s a dance where the women "put everything they’ve got" into the dance/battle. That’s why sometimes you can here it’s called "Ginè Farè" (Woman’s dance), like another Sousou-women’s dance Maane is also called a "Ginè Farè".
